

Making a Will

Making a Will can often be a daunting and unappealing task; however the consequences of not putting all your financial affairs in order before death may be detrimental to those whom you wish to benefit from your estate in the future.

Not making and having a legally valid Will means on death you die intestate. This means that your money and possessions will not automatically pass to the people you would have chosen.

Osbornes' specialist Wills, Probate and Estate Disputes team is able to advise you on all the steps you are required to follow when making a Will, including who to appoint to deal with your affairs following your death.

Our experts are also able to represent individuals who are contesting a Will or who have to manage an estate which was owned by someone who has died intestate.

Our advice and services include:

- Will Preparation
- Tax Planning
- Lifetime gifts
- Managing Estates
- Probate Litigation
- International Estates
- Making a Lasting Power of Attorney
- Applying for Court of Protection Orders

What we can do for you:

- Draft your Will
- Advise you of any tax benefits or savings
- Advise you of the different forms of Trusts you can make be it for tax or family reasons
- Consider any tax reliefs available to you
- Answer any questions you may have on making a will
- Store your will in our secure safe . free of charge
